THE HUMANITIES UNDERGRADUATE RESEARCH SYMPOSIUM

NOVEMBER 12, 2021

9:50AM - 7PM
THE HUMANITIES INSTITUTE, 4TH FLOOR OF HOMER BABBIDGE LIBRARY
After the COVID-19 pandemic led universities across the country to cut humanities research programs, the Humanities Undergraduate Research Symposium aims to reiterate the ability of humanities research to inspire much-needed critical thinking, understanding, and empathy in the face of uncertainty. Literature, philosophy, history, and other humanistic disciplines enable us to raise questions rather than absolute answers, giving nuance to our understanding of culture and society. As we face vulgar inequities and crises and usher in social change, it is essential that we, as a UConn community, spark discourse in these disciplines. We aim to recognize the contributions of our undergraduate students to an ever-evolving dialogue of thought by giving students a platform to celebrate the new knowledge that they have created and to learn more about pursuing more advanced research as a future profession. Through research presentations by students in panel and roundtable formats, a keynote presentation by Dr. Alexis Boylan, and informational panels, the Symposium will introduce what research in the humanities entails and provide opportunity for students to share research they have accomplished through coursework and/or individual projects.
